Re: Lead Journeyman Electrician

Dear Mr. Delgado,

Your posting mentions a run of medical office and school work in north Fort Worth, which is most of what I have built over the last six years. I am a Texas-licensed journeyman electrician, and I am looking for a lead role where I run the crew on a job from rough-in through final.

At Tarrant Commercial Electric I set and terminated a 1,200 amp 480Y/277V service with six panelboards and two 75 kVA transformers for a three-story medical office building. I ran the EMT and rigid feeders on a 186,000 square foot tilt-wall warehouse and wired a 38-classroom school renovation with nLight controls during summer break, when the schedule had no slack. On my jobs in 2024 and 2025 we passed 41 of 43 City of Fort Worth inspections the first time.

For most of that time I have run two apprentices. I lay out the day, check their conduit and box fill against the NEC 2023 tables, and have them do the bends while I watch rather than doing it for them. I came up through the IEC Fort Worth/Tarrant County program myself and know what a good journeyman did for me.

I hold a TDLR journeyman license and OSHA 30, and I can start with two weeks notice. I would be glad to walk one of your current sites with you or your superintendent and talk through how you run your crews.

Sincerely,

Tyler Brandt
